

From left: recycled stationery, from £69, Ecotopia. Recycled wrapping paper, from £1.10 per sheet, by Tatty Devine, from Magma design bookshop. Cushions, from £165, from a selection at Eco Boudoir for Coco de Mer. Milkwood curve chair, £700, and orchid tree picture, £99, The Indian Garden Co. Wind turbine, £25,000, Quiet Revolution, to order for March 2006 installation. Red shoes, £42, Bourgeois Boheme. Give a Goat: supergoat, £75, Good Gifts; or standard goat, £24, oxfamunwrapped.co.uk. Fairtrade chocolate advent calendar, £3.50, The Day Chocolate Co. Silver stars (hanging from cloud), £8, and blue dress, £85, People Tree. Cardboard wendy house, £22.95 Ecotopia. Recycled bag (hanging over wendy house), £30, from Traid Remade. Jacket (suspended) and top (far right), by Edun, from Selfridges

For full stockist information, turn to page 56

LUCY SIEGLE

ETHICAL COLUMNIST

Giving ethical Christmas presents just gets easier and easier. From the brocade jacket by Edun (designed by Mrs Bono) to the silk Eco Boudoir cushions for Coco de Mer, these are 'worthy' gifts drenched in style, glitter and general gorgeousness. This year I even got to wear red velvet high heels from Bourgeois Boheme – free of any animal derivatives.

But who cares about me when I've been upstaged by a goat? Tammy travelled up from Newhaven city farm to eat the belt off my cardigan and encourage you to donate a goat to a subsistence farmer in the developing world. This year, as well as offering the standard goat (£24, www.oxfamunwrapped.co.uk), Good Gifts (www.good-gifts.org.uk) has a super goat for £75, specifically bred for conditions in western Kenya, Uganda and Zimbabwe. They breed faster, producing more sets of twins and are of huge value to local communities.

Tammy is used to the limelight, but the vertical axis wind turbine, by Quiet Revolution, is an ingenue. This is not its actual size – the real version, 5m x 3m, generates enough to keep an average house supplied with energy for the foreseeable future. And although it costs £25,000, I'd love one. Like the goat, it's the gift that keeps on giving.